Cuticura
THE NEW BLOOD PURIFIER
Resolvent
I will now state that I made a miraculous cure of one of the worst cases of skin disease known. The patient is a man forty years old; had suffered fifteen years. His eyes, scalp and nearly his whole body presented a frightful appearance. Had had the attention of twelve different physicians, who prescribed the best remedies known to the profession such a todide potassium, arsenic, corrosive sublimate, sarsaparilla, etc. Had paid $500 for medical treatment with but little relief. I prevailed upon him to use CUTICURA RESOLVENT internally, and the CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP externally. He did so, and was completely cured. The skin on his head, face, and many other parts of his body, which presented a most loathsome appearance, is now as soft and smooth as an infant's, with be scar or trace of the disease left behind. He has now been cured twelve months.
Reported by
F. H. BROWN, Esq., Barnwell S. C.

SCROFULA SORE.
Rev. Dr. ——, in detailing his experience with the CUTICURA REMEDIES, said that through Divine Providence one of his parishioners was cured of a scrofulous sor, which was slowly draining away his life, by the CUTICURA RESOLVENT internally and CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP externally. The poison that had fed the disease was completely driven out.

ECZEMA.
Sixteen months since an eruption broke out on my leg and both feet, which turned out to be Eczema, and caused me great pain and annoyance. I tried various remedies with no good results, until I used the CUTICURA RESOLVENT internally and CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP externally, which entirely cured me so that my skin is as smooth and natural as ever.
I.KEN. M. FRAILEY, 61 South St., Baltimore.

CUTICURA.
The Cuticura treatment, for the cure of Skin, scalp and Blood Diseases, consists in the internal use of CUTICURA RESOLVENT, the new Blood Purifier, and the external use of CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP, the Great Skin Cures. Price of CUTICURA, small box, 50c.; large boxes, $1.00. CUTICURA RESOLVENT, $1.00 per bottle. CUTICURA SOAP, 25c.; CUTICURA MEDICINAL SOAP, 15c.

SELECT STORY.

INNOCENT FLIRTATION; OR THE BEAUTY I MET ON THE TRAIN.

"Pshaw!" said Harry, and tossed the paper away.

"Don't you like it?" I ventured to inquire.

"Like it?—no! It is a made-up story. The only good ones are true ones."

"Do you mean to say that all the glorious fictions that have enchained, that have thrilled the world are true?" I asked a little triumphantly.

"Not true in all their details and combinations, of course," said he; "but whenever you find any incident really affecting, you may be sure that it actually happened. Now, in this story which I have read at your recommendation, there is no such incident. The characters are not alive, and the events never occured; at least within the writer's knowledge. I can tell you a dozen real, true stories that would beat it all hollow."

"Doubted."

"What will you bet?"

"Who's to decide?"

"You shall decide yourself. Come, I'll tell you one to begin with; and if you don't say it is better than this namby pamby affair I have been reading, I'll pay for the supper."

So I set myself to listen.

"I took the night train at Columbus," said Harry, setting himself back to spin his yarn more comfortably.

"Then you are the hero of your own story," said I

"Don't interrupt me. Who said I was a hero? You will see. The cars were full; but I found a seat behind a lady and gentleman, who had appropriated a couple to themselves, and were wrapped up in shawls sleeping very comfortably.

The light from the car lamps fell on their faces. The gentleman, who seemed a foreigner, and who proved to be a Mexican of some distinction, was of middle age—a dark, fine-looking sombre, quiet man. But the lady, young enough to be his daughter, was of dazzling beauty. A pale complexion, flushing with the slightest tint of rose; an oval face; features as regular as those of a Grecian statue—wasn't she beautiful?"

"I suppose she was," said I, wishing to be amiable, when thus appealed to.

"I don't want your opinion on that point. I had been among rough people. I had seen few that could be called refined, or beautiful for a long time; but making allowances for all that, she was certainly one of the most loveable women I ever beheld.

"When she opened her eyes in the pale morning light, they were of that tinge of violet gray, shaded by long, dark lashes, so rare and exquisite. Her little hand, with its long tapering white fingers, tipped with rose, her slender, delicate feet; her form and movements of perfect grace, all held me in a kind of enchantment.

"The cars rattled and roared along down the Little Miami, and we were nearing Cincinnati, when I heard her speak. It was some trifling question. It had the petulence of a spoiled child and a spoiled beauty; but there could be no mistaking the pure, high breeding of her articulation. By the time it was broad daylight I had studied her well, looking over my newspaper. It was Sunday morning, and no train left Cincinnati until evening. We rode up town from the depot in the omnibus, and I sat opposite, and so quite near her.

"As I looked, what I supposed must be my last look at her, and must have expressed all the admiration and interest I felt—saying with my eyes:

'Who can you be, O, beautiful one! she appeared to see me for the first time. Something must have told her what I was thinking. A flush came over her face—very slight, indeed, but still perceptible. It was a little surprise and something which was not indignation.

"I had given my checks for the Burnett House; it was with a pang that I saw my new acquaintances prepare to alight at the Spencer. But while the General, as I heard him called afterward, was picking up a shawl that had been dropped, I sprang out into the snow, and with a look—I doubt not of mingled respect and admiration, and grief—gave my hand to the lady. She thrilled me through with the lightest and quickest touch possible, as if she did not wish to offend a stranger, by declining what he meant for a civility, but did not say 'thank you.' The hand touched his hat to me with a cold, proud look, which I shall never forget.

"I re-entered the omnibus, went to the Burnett House, took a good bath and breakfast, and then went and heard some fine music at the cathedral. My railroad vision I laid away, with a sigh or two, in the store house of memory.

"At nine o'clock in the evening, I left in the cars for Cairo. The Ohio was frozen. As I entered the car, my heart beat as I caught sight of La Signora. The only vacant seat was near them. I received no salutation and made none.

"I knew she saw me: but she did not raise her eyes. The gentleman looked at me as he might at any other traveler, but without a sign of recognition, or any emotion, unless there was a very slight darkening of the brows. I could not see well by the lamplight. They made their arrangements like practiced travelers, and slept, or seemed to sleep. I sat quite near and thought. Did you ever feel a superhuman beauty sinking into your heart, deeper and deeper with every moment's presence?

"Well—"

'No matter. Don't answer now. I must tell my story. In the morning and all day, we were still on the cars. I did not intrude even by a look. Two or three times I had an opportunity to give them some slight attentions. I had the latest New York papers, which I loaned them. I brought a glass of water, when there was none in the cars. I was lucky enough to have nice oranges, and the lady was thirsty. As the day went on the General grew neighborly. He spoke very little English. His lovely wife would talk nothing else. He changed from Spanish to French, but she refused to speak but a word or two of either, and kept him to his English, which it was evident she was determined he should learn.

"She was English by birth. I knew it by many indications. A high born, well bred English lady, of the most refined and delicate type—more Celtic than Saxon; and more American than English, according to common notions, in her appearance.

"At Sandoval, the junction of the St. Louis road and the Illinois Central, they left the train, as I did, and we waited together for the Chicago train for Cairo. There was a crowd waiting, little room, and no supper. I managed to procure some oysters and a bottle of claret wine, which I begged my fellow voyagers to share. In a few hours we were on a magnificent New Orleans steamer. How splendid and how comfortable she seemed to us after our days and nights of rough, noisy railroad, I need not tell. The long, bright saloon—the luxurious furniture of the ladies cabin—the home-look of the piano forte and centre table with vases of flowers and pretty children—the nice table set for parties of eight or ten, with each passenger's card on his plate, and clean, active colored waiters—all this comfort, going under full head of steam down the mighty Mississippi while the banks grew greener and the air grew warmer, day by day, as we approached the tropics, was something very enjoyable after the frost and snow, and hard traveling of the North.

"By some good fortune, as I then thought it, I found myself ticketed at the side of La Signora at the table. By an attraction I did not attempt to resist, I was near her often. She sang as if all the beauty of her matchless form had found expression in music. She played out only with skill, but with soul—with passion; and that, I take, is what we call genius. The General was polite, he could not be cordial. I was blind, or I should have seen how he idolized his wife. When I was leaning over the piano-forte, reveling in the luxury of her music, he walked the cabin reading, or smoked his cigar on the deck. We sang together—we played chess. I did not mean to be dishonorable, but I behaved badly. The General ate but little; he drank, not much, but more than at first, and he smoked nearly all day.

"I do not think La Signora was given to flirting. Nor do I believe with all the vanity you give me credit for, that she really loved me. No; I was fascinated, charmed, and as young men are apt to be, very thoughtless and selfish. She was pleased with me. We had tastes in common; and what woman ever failed to be flattered by admiration?

"So the days passed on. One day, as I was walking along the guards I overheard them talking. It was in French, now.

"'I thought you did not like these American gentlemen,' said he.

"'No, not in general,' she replied very quietly; 'but he is an exception.'

"A few days later I chanced to hear an angry exclamation from the General. I knew I was the subject of it. She made a haughty reply. Never had she seemed so magnificent as on that evening. We sang; and when the little band of negro waiters came into the cabin to play, we danced. Never did I see so sad a face as his—when, after a long and exhilerating waltz, in which I seemed to swim in a sea of ecstacy, I led her tenderly and gallantly to a sofa—such a sad, despairing look! It sank into my heart; but I was full of happiness and drove it away. I had done nothing more than had been done every day in our society. It was a mere flirtation.

The more I saw La Signora, the more self possessed she seemed to me to be in her honor and purity. She yielded for once at least to the custom of the society in which she lived and was indulging in an innocent flirtation.

"It was easy to imagine more. The general saw us often from a distance, as he entered the cabin. My manner was free and impassioned. She was kind and gracious, and innocently but most thoughtlessly happy, as she was gifted and beautiful. She should have known—I should have known—that the consciousness of his age might have rankled in a sensative spirit.

She loved and honored him and trusted him too much.

"My good General,' she would say, 'he is a little cold and austere in society; but such a good child!'

"We passed those long, and desolate shores, through whose forests the devastating flood rushes ever, ever on. One morning our steamer rounded to, and made a landing at Natchez. The night before we had been very gay. The General, as I said good night, and kissed the jeweled white hand kindly held out to me, was more pale and ghastly than I had ever seen him. He was not at breakfast next morning. I saw him rapidly pacing the hurricane deck.

"La Signora and I had a bargain to go on shore together and try to get some flowers. The weather was like June, and she saw the roses in blossom with a child's delight.

"I don't know why it was; but my heart was heavy, as we walked over the gang plank at the Natchez landing. I remembered the pale, sad face. But I was too intoxicated with the beauty that seemed to envelop me, like an atmosphere, to have the impression last.

"We got our roses and came on board. As we entered the cabin the black chambermaid met us, wringing her hands and wild with consternation.

"'O massa! O mistress!' she exclaimed, 'what's de captain? That's a man overboard! I know it's a man. They needn't tell me it's a billet of wood. Don't I know a man when I see him?'

"I did not believe her—still with an undefined apprehension which seized us both, we ran aft. The moment we got to the nursery windows in the stern, there rose from the boiling flood, far down the stream, but near enough to be seen distinctly, the pale face of the General! He threw up his arms and sank beneath the surface never to be seen again!

"With a wild shriek she sank into a swoon. The women took her from my arms and bore her to the stateroom. I rushed on deck. The alarm had been given—the yawl was pulling down stream, but it was useless. The body of the drowned man was sweeping along the broad, deep, turbid river, never to be found, perhaps, until the sea gives up her dead. On the after part of the hurricane deck, I found the General's watch, pocketbook and a minature of La Signora.

Seventy miles above New Orleans—the beautiful slope which after the desolation of the thousand miles above, opens upon the traveler like a fairy land, there gleams among the orange groves, the white walls of the convent of the Sacred Heart. As we neared it the whistle blew a signal to land. The chambermaid came to me with a request that I would come aft and see the lady. I had not seen her. She had not left the state room. When I entered the cabin where she stood, dressed in black with a black veil, ready to land, I scarcely knew her—so pale—so ghostly pale; and her eyes red with weeping.

"She held out her hand to me—the tears gushed afresh.

"'Forgive me,' she said, 'forgive me, my friend, and pray that God may forgive me. I was educated with the dear ladies of the Sacred Heart. I have no mother on earth but them. My folly has murdered the best of men, who loved me more than life. I have no reproach for you—the blame was all my own. I am going to ask these ladies to give me an asylum. Good bye, God bless you.'

She gave me a little cross. I led her across the gang-plank, dropped a tear upon her hand, and took my last look at one of the loveliest women on earth, who, in one year, was an angel in heaven.

"I don't know, write it out, at any rate, It may keep some young fellow from being a fool. It may make some beautiful young wife more considerate."

And so I have written it.

A Little French Story.

In some parts of France marriageable girls are accustomed to pluck, as they return from midnight mass on Christmas Eve, a sprig of apple tree, which they put in a vial full of water; the vial is hung in their bed chamber, in front of the window; if one bud blooms before Easter the mistress is sure to be married before the year ends. Among the servants of a chateau near Alencon was a chambermaid from Brittany. She was gentle, good-natured, quiet, pious—an excellent creature every way, but—she was hunchbacked. Her name was Ursule. Taking advantage of the dark night she, too, plucked a sprig of apple tree, sure that nobody saw her. She was mistaken. A fellow servant saw her and made servants' hall ring with peals of laughter at poor Ursule's expense. Still they kept the secret among themselves. They all agreed to play a trick on poor Ursule. Easter eve one of the journeymen gardners removed the old sprig of apple tree from the vial in Ursule's bed chamber and put in its place a sprig covered with blossoms. When Ursule went into her bed chamber she could not believe her eyes. She returned to the servants' hall, her face was radiant with delight as she showed her trophy; the laughter, jeers, hootings of her comrades revealed the trick put on her. She stood dumb, confounded, trembling scarcely able to restrain her tears. Just at this moment the mistress entered the servants' hall. An elderly servant explained the scene to her. The mistress said: "Ursule, the apple tree sprig may be trusted; believe it; you will be married before Christmas next; you are a virtuous girl; I am sure you will make a virtuous wife; all you want to get a husband is money; the money wanted I will give you." As she spoke the mistress twined a 1000f. bank note around the sprig and returned it to Ursule. A fortnight afterwards the journeyman gardener who had put the trick on her asked her in marriage, but she refused him, at which he was greatly jeered, and married another.

Why Women Know More than Men.

Timblethrope came home rather late the other night with five hundred dollars, more or less, in his vest pocket. Before he went down stairs he recollected that there ought to be a good deal of money in the lower right hand pocket of his vest, and he felt there to discover if it was all right. It was all wrong, however, for it was not there. During the night it had mysteriously disappeared, and this filled him with dismay; for he had a large note to meet that day. "Perhaps," he said to himself, for he had not yet informed Mrs. Timblethrope of his loss, "perhaps it has dropped upon the floor." He therefore searched every nook and corner of his chamber, but the missing treasure was not to be found, and Timblethrope made his way to the next story below, where his mournful face at once attracted the attention of his wife.

"What is the matter with you, Timothy," she gasped, "are you ill."

"Yes," he replied, "I have lost my appetite."

"Is that all?" she continued in a relieved tone that was not untinged with asperity.

"No, five hundred dollars has gone with it," thundered Timblethrope, who could contain himself no longer.

"Oh, you must have it in your pockets somewhere," answered his wife; have you looked in them all?"

"Only in one where I put it; why should I turn all my garments inside out?"

Mrs. Timblethrope approached him, and insisted upon feeling in his vest pockets, and he was too dejected to resist. Finally, from the upper left hand vest pocket she drew forth, with a triumphant air, the missing roll of bills. It was a pocket he only used for the reception of cigars, and he could not account for the presence of the money there. Mrs. Timblethrope, however, could, though she said nothing; for after extracting a fifty dollar from the pile some time before, she had, quite naturally, placed the money in the wrong pocket.

Odd motives sometimes impel to matrimony, but those which have just led to a marriage mania among the poorer Jews of Odessa, causing them to pair at the rate of 150 couples a day, are at least practical rather than sentimental. They have heard that to married Hebrews land is to be given free, either in Palestine or in that modern Promised Land, the United States. It shows a good deal of faith as well as alacrity that they are willing to wed on this general assurance. Some doubting Israelites of the Biblical age might have demanded to see the land first, before entering the bonds of matrimony.

A Land of Roses.

The maritime vale of Santa Barbara, for sixty miles facing the Pacific Ocean, we consider the most attractive in California. The soil is extra deep dark alluvium. By the formation of the coast it is sheltered from the rude trade winds, elsewhere so unpleasant on our shores. San Francisco being in north latitude 37½ degrees, Santa Barbara is 34½ degrees north, 3 degrees southwardly. Here flourish in luxuriance the fig tree and the olive, the prune and the almond, the orange and the lemon, the nectarine and the pomegranate. Here grows Alfalfa clover, giving three cuttings a year and pasture through the winter. Here flowers bloom perennial. Here only is a paradise of roses and other fragrant flowers cultivated for commercial perfumery. Here the bee pastures all the year, the hivers gather honey every day, and, abstaining themselves they give to man nearly their whole production. Only in stress of stormy weather they draw upon their hoarded sweets. Feathered songsters never migrate from this elysium. Man's dwelling is enlivened by the chirp of birds and their music gives perpetual cheer, unchecked by winter frosts. Happy, thrice blessed are they whose lot is cast where happiness is so lightly wooed and won! Here in mid December the company's rose gardens are a sight to charm the eye when, day by day, children gather ever blooming flowers for extraction of perfume for the toilet. At Kezanlik, in the foothills of the Balkan range in Roumelia, South Turkey, north latitude 42½ degrees, is a valley devoted to rose culture exclusively for like purposes, but there the sale of nosegays to many villages is extra profitable. There, as here, the hair and the clothes of all who work among the roses retain the perfume for a week of absence from the valley.—San Francisco Letter in the Baltimore Sun.

The Morey Letter Conspiracy.

The origin of the Morey letter has at last been discovered. The ringleader in the conspiracy was H. H. Hadley, a prominent officer in the Hancock Republican Club, New York, the organization that embraced within its membership a number of Republican politicians who foolishly jumped into the Democratic ranks at a time when they imagined Hancock would be elected. Hadley has told the story of his connection with the forgery. While the details of the statement are suppressed, it is known that Hadley and his associates palmed off the letter as an original document upon the Democratic National Committee. John A. Davenport, of New York, who deserves the credit of having unearthed the fraud, is still engaged in following up the trail, with the expectation of running the game into the Democratic camp. Senator Barnum is suspected of having had knowledge of the forgery, and it is claimed by those who have investigated the matter that subsequent developments will lay a large share of the blame very close to his door. The investigation already made completely exonerates Representative A. S. Hewitt of any knowledge of the forgery. It is reported as gossip, that ex-Congressman H. G. Worthington, who was Collector of Customs at Charleston, S. C., during Patterson's carpet-bag administration of that State, had knowledge of the forgery. Worthington is a native of Cumberland, Md., where Lindsay lived. He was a member of the Hancock Republican Club. The story goes that Worthington persuaded

BLOOMSBURG, PA.

FRIDAY, MAY 12th, 1882.

The old board of Commissioners of Lycoming county, were brought before Alderman Blair of Williamsport, on Tuesday the 9th inst. charged with embezzlement, conspiracy, perjury and being concerned in public contracts. Each was placed under $800 bail for appearance at court.

The Stalwarts say all is peace in the Republican party now, but we are inclined to suspect the ghost of insubordination in some quarters will rise again to vex the bosses at the new election, unless Boss Cameron shall have the wisdom to imitate Boss Gladstone in Irish affairs, and backs square down from his high handed assumption of claiming by the right Divine to dictate all political questions affecting the people af the Commonwealth.—Wilkes Barre Record.

Since Col. Ingersoll failed to bring his client John W. Dorsey into Court on May 1st as he had agreed to do, warrants have now been issued and placed in the hands of officers in Texas, Vermont, New York and the District of Columbia, but as yet he has not been found. Col. Bliss had relied on the promise of Col. Ingersoll to have him present on May 1st and therefore had made no arrest. When Bliss asked Ingersoll why he failed to fulfill his agreement and have Dorsey present,he replied "I can't afford to help you fellows and he won't be here.

The Bloomsburg Columbian announces by authority that ex-United States Senator Charles R. Buckalew will be a candidate for the Democratic Congressional nomination in the Eleventh district of this State. This is a period of reform next year, but the public will hail with pleasure the measure of present reform that is implied in the recall to public service of men of the character and ability of Mr. Buckalew. The Democratic party of the district will be faithless to itself if it fails to give him the nomination by acclamation.—Times

Senator Wolverton does not hanker after public position, having a law practice which brings him many honors and fees, but he looms up as a strong candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor all the same.—Phila Press.

And the Democratic party will act wisely if they select him as their standard bearer. It would trouble the opposition to find anything crooked in his record, and if he should be elected it would be a case of the office seeking the man, and not the man seeking the office. That is the kind of a governor Pennsylvania wants just now.

The Republican State Convention met at Harrisburg on Wednesday and nominated the ticket as proposed by Cameron. James A. Beaver of Centre county was nominated for Governor, W. T. Davies of Bradford county for Lieutenant Governor, W. H. Rawle of Philadelphia for Supreme Judge, John M. Greer for Secretary of Internal Affairs, and Thomas M. Marshall of Allegheney for Congressman at-large. Senator Mitchell is reported as saying of the ticket, "We will have nothing to do with it whatever—we shall hold our convention as previously decided upon and nominate our own people with the possible exception of Rawle. It is barely possible that we may endorse him but certainly none of the others.

Buckalew for Governor.

If Mr. Buckalew were presented as a candidate for governor the liberal and independent men of the state,who have grown weary of party shackles and the pretensions of sham reformers, would rally around him. Since 1872 the prejudice and calumny born of grievance and party spirit which surrounded him have disappeared like the exhalation of the morass, and he stands before the people in his true character. There would be no necessity to put a platform under him. His record and great services would constitute the platform. He is the best embodiment of the true and not the sham spirit of reform that is abroad in the commonwealth. No man in the state despises so much the current cant of reform, and no ten men in the state have done so much of its genuine practical work. The people who recognize him as their most eminent fellow citizen would delight to honor him with the chief magistracy, and party lines would melt in his presence. The man whose shaping hand did such effective work in drafting the constitution would find a way to give the people the benefit of its provisions and to maintain it in its integrity and purity.—Philadelphia Record (ind.)

ASSASSINATION IN IRELAND.

Lord Frederick Cavendish, Chief Secretary for Ireland, and Under Secretary Burke were stabbed in Phoenix Park, Dublin, on the evening of the 6th.

They were both strolling in the park, about half a mile from the city gate and a quarter of a mile from the Chief Secretary's lodge, when a car drove up containing four men, two of whom jumped down from the car and attacked Lord Cavendish and Mr. Burke, stabbing them both several times in the throat and breast. The victims struggled hard for life, and in the struggle became separated, their bodies being found some paces apart. The tragedy occured about ten minutes after 7 o'clock in the evening and in broad daylight. The bodies were first discovered by two young gentlemen who were riding bicycles through the park, and who immediately gave the alarm to the police. Surgeons soon reached the spot, but the police were already conveying Mr. Burke's body away to the town, where an examination showed life to be extinct. The upper part of the body was perforated in a shocking manner and presented a ghastly sight. Proceeding further the medical man reached the body of Lord Cavendish, which was being conveyed away from the park on a stretcher. The body of the Chief Secretary displayed the same dreadful wounds, in addition to which his left arm was broken and torn, as if he had put it up to protect his breast. Lord Cavendish was quite dead. He was appointed only two weeks ago to succeed Mr. Forster as Chief Secretary for Ireland, and for two years previous he was Financial Secretary of the Treasury in Gladstone's Ministry. His assassination is looked upon as one of the worst blows that could have befallen Ireland at the present time, and is said to have no political aspect. It is believed to be the work of cranks.

The Plymouth Record contains the announcement of Henry McKinney of Great Bend as an Independent candidate for governor. He comes before the people in this way:

I offer myself as an independent candidate for the next Governor of the State of Pennsylvania. I offer myself to the people on this platform:—weekly wages to employees in current funds without rebate, and all other reforms for labor according to the doctrine of the Bible, "not to oppress the laborer in withholding his hire." Upon all other issues, Greenback, Democracy or Republicanism, or any other ism I am silent. That you can construe as you wish from my past record. I offer no reward for votes, but am certain if women were allowed to vote I should be elected.

Judging from his card, it is very fortunate that women are not allowed to vote, otherwise we would probably have a "crank" for governor.

Finding the Body of a Peddler Almost Decapitated.

At about 7 o'clock on the morning of the 5th inst at Plainfield N. J., some farm hands while going to their work saw lying in a piece of woodland, within a rod of the road, the dead body of a man with the head half served from the body. A basket of tin ware stood about a rod away from the body, with the contents undisturbed. The body was still warm. The man was identified as one of two tin peddlers who had been seen in the neighborhood the night before. His companion was missing but a tramp who had been seen in the neighborhood an hour before the discovery was followed to Netherwood depot a mile from the scene of the murder, and arrested. He was searched and small stains like blood were found upon some clothing in his pack and upon a razor. He admitted having been in the neighborhood during the morning, but denied all knowledge of the murder. He was locked up. The dead man was of medium height, light built, black curly hair, and aged about twenty. There were no marks of a struggle around where he lay and he is supposed to have been murdered as he slept. The man arrested is a German tramp and gives his name as Agustus Schlachley.

DELONG AND PARTY FOUND.

Secretary Chandler received a telegram from Engineer Melville dated at Irkutsh May 5th, saying that Lieutenant DeLong and party had been found dead, and all the books and papers were recovered. DeLong's party comprised fourteen of the Jeanette's crew—the commander of the expedition, Dr. Ambler, Mr. Collins, the scientist, Nindemann, Erickson, Gortz, Noros, Dressler, Boyd, Iversen, seamen, and the Chinese cooks, Ah Sam and Alexel. They left the Jeanette in the first cutter after the sinking of the ship, June 13, 1881, and endeavored to reach the coast of Russian Siberia, which lay 200 miles southward. The seamen, Noros and Nindemann, pursued a different route from the others, and succeeded in reaching the nearest Russian settlement. Their rescue was reported four months ago, probably about the time that DeLong and his party perished.

The Rodgers, a vessel sent out by the government in search of the Jeannette, was burned and it is said that thirty out of thirty seven persons on board the vessel were lost. A third vessel has started to rescue the survivors of the Rodgers. It seems as though a sufficient number of vessels and lives have been lost in the exploration of the Arctic regions to cause a halt in the effort to find the North pole. The only result of all Arctic expeditions has been to prove conclusively that those regions cannot be navigated.

General Porter Pardoned.

In reply to General Fitz John Porter's application of April 17 for the remission of the portion of the sentence of his court-martial now being executed, the President has removed the only legal obstacle to Congressional action, and exhausted all his powers in the case under existing laws:

Chester A. Arthur, President of the United States, to all to whom these presents may come greeting:

Whereas,on the 10th day of January, 1863, Fitz John Porter, then Major-General of Volunteers in the military service of the United States, and also Colonel of the Fifteenth Regiment of Infantry and Brevet Brigadier General in the United States Army, was by general court-martial, for certain offences of which he had been thereby convicted, and sentenced "to be cashiered and to be forever disqualified from holding any office of trust or profit under the Government of the United States." and

Whereas,on the 21st day of January, in 1863, that sentence was duly confirmed by the President of the United States and by his order of the same date carried into execution; and

Whereas,so much of that sentence as forever disqualified the said Fitz John Porter from holding office imposed upon him a continuing penalty and is still being executed; and

Whereas, Doubts have since arisen concerning the guilt of the said Fitz John Porter of the offences whereof he was convicted by the said court-martial, founded upon the result of an investigation ordered on the 21st day of April, 1878, by the President of the United States, which are deemed by me to be of sufficient gravity to warrant the remission of that part of said sentence which has not been completely executed; Now, therefore, know ye that I. Chester A. Arthur, President of the United States, by virtue of the power vested in me by the Constitution of the United States and in consideration of the premises, do hereby grant to the said Fitz John Porter full remission of the hereinbefore mentioned continuing penalty.

In witness whereof I have heaunto signed my name and caused the seal of the United States tn be affixed. Done at the City of Washington this fourth day of May, A. D. 1882, and of the independence of the United States the one hundredth and sixth.

[L. S.] CHESTER A. ARTHUR, President.

Frederick T. Frelinghuysen, Secretary of State.

The following is General Porter's acceptance:

Washington, May, 5, 1882.

Hon. Fredrick T. Freylinghuysen, Secretary of State.

Sir: I respectfully ask you to express to the President my acknowledgement of the receipt, through you, and my appreciation of his order remitting the continous portion of the sentence imposed upon me by court-martial in 1863.

I am very respectfully yours, &c.,

FITZ JOHN PORTER.

General Porter's memorial to Congress receipts and embraces the documentary history of the case, and asks that Congress will take the necessary action to carry out at once the recommendation of the advisory board of army officers ordered by the President and to restore him to the positions of which he was deprived by the sentence of the court-martial.

A Cashier's Flight.

SUDDEN DISAPPEARANCE OF WILLIAM S. WATSON, OF WILLIAMSPORT—THE FUNDS SAFE.

William S. Watson, cashier of the West Branch National Bank of Williamsport, one of the oldest and soundest banking institutions in this part of the State, has suddenly disappeared. On Wednesday evening, last week at a late hour, he visited the house of F. E. Gleim, the first teller, and, handing him the keys of the safe, said he was going away and would not be back before the following day at noon, and before the teller could interrogate him farther he had disappeared. No message was left for his father, Oliver Watson, the president of the bank, or any member of his own family. He did not take a large amount of money with him. On the 1st inst. he had drawn his salary for April, amounting to $223. He also had under his charge a fund of $25,000 belonging to his father, from which he drew $5,000, leaving his individual note for it. This is believed to be all the money he took with him.

It appears that a couple of years ago he became intimate with a woman named Annie Tyler, residing in that city His relations with her caused trouble at his home, but he kept up his attentions. A few days ago the woman went to New York. It is believed Watson followed her, for on Friday night a letter was received from him, dated New York, in which he stated that things were getting too warm for him and he would sail on Thursday next for South America, and that he did not want to see anybody from Williamsport soon again. A meeting of the directors of the bank was held, when an examination of the books was made and the accounts of the absconding cashier were found all right. Oliver Watson, the father of the cashier, is one of the oldest, most respected and wealthiest citizens of Williamsport. During his long and busy life he has accumulated an estate which will probably reach a million and a half of dollars. He is an invalid, having been confined to his room all winter, only being able to appear upon the streets once or twice during that time. His son, the absconding cashier, was virtually the president of the bank and attended to nearly all the business. He was so highly regarded by his father that he left nearly all the financial duties of the office to him and he would undoubtedly have succeeded his father as president of the bank when the latter retired. So much faith was reposed in him by his father that some time ago he deeded him the old homestead in that city, where he resided.

Aside from the common reports the conduct of the cashier is in many respects a mystery, and it is believed that there must be something more serious yet to be discovered which caused him to act so precipitately and foolishly. He was in good financial condition himself. He received a good salary for his services and was not in straitened circumstances. His father and mother are very much distressed over his sudden and strange disappearance, and his wife and five children, although partially estranged from him, are reported as nearly distracted.

Boys in the Mines.

20,000 WORKING IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Of the 80,000 persons employed in the work of mining and preparing anthracite coal for market, says a Pennsylvania newspaper correspondent, at least 20,000 are boys, whose ages range between nine and eighteen years. Some enter the breaker to pick slate at the tender age of six or seven. In most cases this is the result of a desperate need growing out of the sudden death of the father—upon whose labor the family depended solely for support—by one of the many accidents so common in the coal mines. One does not know whether it would be more cruel to permit or prevent this on a close examination of the circumstances. These lisping little workmen, for whom the battle of life begins at the very cradle, have to aid in supporting younger brothers and sisters, who were suddenly left fatherless, and whose tender years entitle them to the sole attention of their mothers. For the employment of child-labor, under such circumstances, there may be some excuse in a great individual community; but it is an iron fate that compels it. There are, however, a great many parents in Pennsylvania who, for the sake of the paltry earnings, send their children to work in the coal breakers as slate pickers at an early age, and for these there is no palliation. Having once entered upon such a career, the boy may be said to be bound to the business for life, and he goes through the regular stages like an automaton. He picks slate until he gets too big for the screen room. Then he considers himself fortunate if he is "promoted" to drive a mule in the mines—a task calling for no small share of patience, skill and courage. Then, in course of time, he becomes a laborer, and when he is well advanced in years he may attain to the responsible position of miner unless in the meantime he is crushed to death by a fall of roof, kicked by a mule or squeezed between the cars. He takes all these risks, and more. His opportunities, by reason of his calling, are generally very meagre for self-improvement. If he attends the public schools it is usually during some period of suspension in mining, when everybody in the region is unhappy and but little thought is given to learning. Of course, when children are thus shut out from all reasonable chances for schooling it is not to be expected that they can become competent in any sphere calling for more judgment than is required by the ordinary day laborer, and but few make sufficient progress to be competent as foremen.

PEOPLE IN GLASS HOUSES ETC.

While it may be proper those "living in glass houses should never throw stones," we think it is eminently proper that those working in glass houses should say a "good word" for anything of benefit to themselves. In this connection, Mr. Isaac Correy, Manager Salem, N. J. Glass Works, remarks: I am pleased to say that I have used the Great Remedy, St. Jacobs Oil, for Rheumatism with excellent results; other members of my family have also been greatly benefited by its use.

The Court House at Pittsburg was almost entirely destroyed by fire on Sunday last shortly after dinner. The building originally cost $200,000 and the loss will probably be $100,000. Nearly all the records were saved. The fire originated in a restaurant stand in the rotunda.

Some Choice Books of Wit and Humor.

The book-buying public will certainly be delighted, even if the old-line publishers are disgusted, with the work The Useful Knowledge Publishing Company, of New York, is doing. They are just issuing a number of works of the choicest grade of wit and humor. One, "Studies in Stanzas, Hints for the Times, Ballads, and Broadsides," is by Orpheus C. Kerr, than whom no American humorous writer has won worthier fame. For keen wit, scathing satire, deep laid, mysterious plot, purity and nobility of thought, and rollicking, healthy, hearty fun, he is quite without a rival in his varied brilliant accomplishments. The millions of the American people who have in times past laughed at his inimitable productions will give his new book most hearty welcome. It is issued in a charming little volume at the usual marvellously low prices of the U. K. P. Co.. Utility Binding, 20 cts.. Extra cloth, 20 cts., Half Russia, 40 cts. At the same time they publish, each in a large 12 mo. volume of nearly 800 pages, the complete works of the inimitable wit and essayist, Charles Lamb, the Choice Works of the incomparable Irish Humorist, Tom Hood, and the Choice Works of Dean Swift, whose quality of wit is without its like in the world's literature. All these are books which naturally belong in every man's library. Enterprising booksellers supply them, and the publishers want club agents and canvassers in every county and town, to whom very unusual terms and facilities are given.

Newspaper Sharks.

That class who take a paper for a number of years and stop without paying for it, are reminded that "the new postal law now makes the taking of a newspaper and the refusal to pay for the same, theft, and any person guilty of such an act is liable to criminal proceeding, the same as if he had stolen goods to the amount of subscription." A theft, doubtless in the same category of offenses, for one to order a pound of coffee or any other groceries, when wrapped or bagged and laid on the counter, for the purchaser to walk off with the article without paying for it–a theft as glaring as to take a newspaper from a postoffice box unpaid for for a year, and when demand is made refuse to pay for it. The law is a good one and should be enforced, as is being done in New York, a proprietor having instituted suit against several subscribers for the offense. Another set of offenders are those who remove from the city and county and neglect to pay their subscription, or remove to another part of the city or country without giving notice of removal; and being indebted for the paper for some months, may conceive this plan of secrecy an effectual one to get rid of payment. Thue newspaper publishers are robbed of their just dues—a loss to which all are more or less subjected through downright dishonesty. Such sharks should be dealt with as the postal law suggests, and an example made of some of them, would have a restraining effect on others likewise offending. We are happy to say that the number of "sharks" on our list is very small, most of them having been dropped.

Advice to Gardeners.

One who knows that of which he speaks, a skilled gardener and fruit raiser, says that the most effectual plan of destroying the curculio, which fowls cannot reach, is to encourage wrens to remain in the orchard. They destroy more of these insects in a season than all the other birds put together. But how to induce the wrens to build and stay in the orchard. The plan is very easy. Put up bird houses or boxes, with the openings so small that neither blue birds or sparrows can get in and the work is done. Madame Wren will understand the matter in a moment, and the pair will build and raise their young, waging relentless war upon the whole insect tribe in general, but upon the curculio in particular.

If it is any benefit to the laboring classes to have a woolen mill and other manufacturing establishments in Bloomsburg, they can thank the water company for making our town a desirable location for such industries. The best way to prevent any more manufactures from coming here is to let it be known that the town refuses to pay for fire protection.

Wm. Webb met with an accident on Wednesday. He was at work with four other men in mining iron ore, near Mr. Armstrong's. A large bulk of ore and dirt became loosened on account of the wet condition of the ground, and while they were taking out ore underneath, it fell down upon them. Mr. Webb was led out of the mine, and to Mr. Armstrong's house, when he became very weak and they were obliged to bring him home in a wagon. He is getting along quite well, and probably nothing series will result from the accident.

VENNOR PREDICTS A BAD SUMMER.—In answer to letters from all parts of the United States, asking for signification of the recent aurora, Professor Vennor, the Canadian weather prophet says: "The approaching summer will be cold and wet over a very considerable portion of the continent, South and West." He should not be surprised should each month for the remainder of the year bring frosts. In years past brilliant aurroras at this time in April, at Toronto, New York and more Southern points, have almost invariably been succeeded by cold and wet summers.

In disposing of license cases last week Judge Elwell said:

"We hold with Chief Justice Agnew, that those who deny that there should be any licenses under the law, and those who claim that a license should be granted whenever an applicant comes with proper papers are both wrong, neither of them right. The court is bound to act under a law which contemplates the granting of licenses. Page upon page of the statute book has reference to the granting of licenses, and a system is supposed to be provided by which the interests of the public and the rights of individuals may be guarded. Our business is, so far as we can, so far as we know, to carry out the law. We have endeavored to do so in our charges, to juries and grand juries as well as in our decrees upon petitions contested by remonstrants. Whatever may be the views of others, we are satisfied that so long as spirituous, vinous and malt liquors are to be sold, they should be sold under some sort of regulations, and further, that while the present regulations exist it is our duty to enforce them without arbitrary diminution or enlargement, or in other words without allowing private opinions (even our own) to take the place and the name of judicial discretion."

Frank O. Herring, Esq., of the Champion Safe Works 251 and 252 Broadway, New York, reports the use of St. Jacobs Oil for a stiffness and soreness of the shoulder, with most pleasant and efficacious effects.

The Commissioners will repair and enlarge some of the county offices, in accordance with the recommendation of the grand jury. More room is needed especially in the Prothonotary's office. Only one or two can do business there conveniently at present at the same time, while there are sometimes a dozen waiting. A notice for proposals appears in this issue.

William H. Snyder was admitted to practice law in the several courts of this county on Monday of last week. Mr. Snyder is well known, having been county superintendent for nine years, and his popularity and ability in that position will no doubt bring him a lucrative practice. He studied law with E. R. Ikeler Esq.

At a meeting of the Bloomsburg Water Company held on Tuesday evening May 9, 1882, the following resolution was adopted:

WHEREAS The majority of the Town Council at their special meeting, Saturday evening May 6th, 1882, declined to consider favorably either of the propositions made them by us, namely: $1200 per year or $1,000 per year for five years. Therefore be it.

Resolved There is but one thing for the Water Company to do, namely, that if the situation remains the same one week from this date as at the present we promptly on that date disable the plugs that are now evidently considered worthless until such time as their value shall be appreciated.

If people who eat pork would take the trouble to cook it thoroughly we should hear much less than we do of trichinosis. No doubt a great deal of the salt pork that is sold is really unfit for use, either because the meat was diseased or because it was imperfectly cured, but in most cases it is certain the fault is in the kitchen. The recent case in Frankford, Pa., illustrates this. Some of the household found the ham undertone and had it recooked. None of them were affected. The others, who ate the parboiled ham, suffered the consequences. Pork in any form must be thoroughly cooked before it is fit to be eaten. When so treated—unless it be such obviously bad meat as nobody should try—the danger from it is slight. People who feed their children with raw ham ought to expect them to die.

An exchange says: At the Episcopal Convocation at Williamsport, in Christ Church, it was unanimously "Resolved that our fraternal greeting and admiring sympathy be expressed to the Rev. WILLIAM BRYCE MORROW, for the noble readiness with which he has volunteered to minister to those suffering from the fearful visitation of the small-pox in South Bethlehem—a visitation which has occurred during a vacancy in the rectorship of the parish in that place, caused by the consecration of its last rector to the Episcopate of the diocese of Pittsburgh." Since this duty was so nobly undertaken by MR. MORROW, the writer has seen a touching incident recorded of his services there. One of the choirister boys of the Church choir had died of the epidemic disease, and the burial took place ot the dead of night. MR. MORROW officiated, and at the grave he sang, in the lonely midnight, the hymn which he knew to be the favorite of the chorister. Priests who are faithful in times of trial like this win for themselves an unfailing heritage in the hearts of the people.

Fire Protection.

At a special meeting of the Town Council held on Saturday evening May 6th, R. C. Neal appeared on behalf of the Bloomsburg Water Company and requested the council to enter into an agreement for water for fire protection, and offered to furnish the same for five years for $1000 a year. He stated that it costs Danville $8,850 a year for fire plugs, and cited several other places to show that the proposed rate is low in comparison with other towns. He also read an agreement between Mr. Birkenbine and the Water Company, showing that the additional cost of the fire protection apparatus was over $17000 more than the cost of the works for private use would have been. Freas Brown stated to the council that the premiums on insurance have decreased about 30 per cent since the town has been supplied with water. C. R. Buckalew informed the council that there was no constitutional prohibition against making the contract asked for, and C. G. Barkley, Town Solicitor, confirmed Mr. Buckalew's opinion. L. E. Waller offerred the following: "Resolved that the offer of the Bloomsburg Water Company to furnish the town of Bloomsburg with water for five consecutive years at $1000 per annum, be and the same is hereby accepted by the town of Bloomsburg." Messrs. Hartman, Waller and Moyer voted yea, and Hassert, Rabb, Sterling and Herring, nay. A motion was made that all the fire apparatus belonging to the Town be disposed of, but a motion to adjourn cut off discussion.

No proposition of any kind was made by those who voted against the contract, and the natural inference is that they do not propose the town shall have a public water supply during the present year. If this is the intention the majority in the council is not only doing itself a great injustice but it is making the Town act in very bad faith toward the Water Company. By direction of the Town authorities fire plugs were put in, after being located by a committee of the council. A contract was entered into for six months for $800, and now all that is asked is $1000 a year. Whether this is too much we are not prepared to say, but it is less than $1600 a year, and it is less than 6 per cent. on the cost of the fire protection. If there is to be no water, insurance policies taken at low rates because of the water supply, will be cancelled, and higher rates demanded; property owners who now pay the bulk of the taxes will be compelled to pay more insurance than their taxes would amount to, while the man who pays only an occupation tax would not be affected one way or the other. To refuse to contract at all for water, under the idea that such action is in the interest of the laboring man is a mistake, and to administer the affairs of the corporation in that way is not economy.

Sarah Gross Convicted.

The trial of Mrs. Sarah Gross in Court last week on the charge of having attempted to produce an abortion on the person of Mrs. Charles Krug, resulting in the death of the latter, excited much interest. The evidence though mostly of a circumstantial character, was overwhelming, and the jury found but little trouble in finding a verdict of guilty, in less than an hour. Mrs. Krug died at the house of Mrs. Gross, on the 23d of February last. As there were many suspicious circumstances Mrs. Gross was arrested on the Sunday following, and has been in jail ever since for want of bail. The evidence at the trial showed that she had sent word to Mrs. Krug, making propositions; that Mrs. Krug and Mrs. Knittle her sister, went to see Mrs. Gross for the purpose of having an operation performed: that the two went up stairs together leaving Mrs. Knittle down; that Mrs. Krug's clothing showed that she was dressed different from her usual custom, and her clothing was very wet when removed from her. Mrs. Gross told several conflicting stories about the cause of Mrs. Krug's visit to her. If she is not guilty she is the unfortunate victim of a strong chain of circumstances. On Wednesday afternoon she was brought into court and sentenced to pay a fine of $500 and costs of prosecution and undergo imprisonment in the eastern penitentiary for four years. Jerry Gross, the husband, is a hard working stone mason, and there is no reason to believe that he had any knowledge of his wife's practice.

Washburn's United Monster Shows.

This gigantic enterprise will exhibit at Bloomsburg, Saturday May 20th. From the well-known reputation of its proprietors for honesty and fair dealing and the factthat they claim always to fulfil their advertised promises, together with the endorsement they have everywhere received from the Press, it is said that it will be in every detail an exhibition of rare and surprising excellence, from which everything savoring of vulgarity or obscenity has been strictly eliminated, thus making it an undeniable pleasure to visit this model exposition. In the ring performance, all old worn out and threadbare acts have been abolished, the proprietors having wisely adopted the laudable course of presenting to the public nothing but new and attractive features. To accomplish this end, they have been unceasing in their efforts to procure the leading equestrian and gymnast talent of the whole world, and that they have proved eminently successful in their endeavors, is fully evinced by the formidable host of arenic celebrities now engaged to appear at each and every performance of this show.

The admission to this entertainment is only 35 cents; children, 25 cents, which undoubtedly brings a visit thereto within the reach of everyone.

PET ANIMALS AND DISEASES.—One of the medical journals, in referring to the ease with which gems of contagious diseases can be caught and conveyed in the hair of animals, tells of a cat that had diphtheria and died in the house: the disease broke out violently the day after the animal's body was removed, and two or three children died with it. Horses with glanders sometimes transmit loathsome disease to men. The hog cholera that was destructive a few years ago was frequently carried from pen to pen and drove to drove by rats who ate of the dead hogs, died, and were in turn eaten by other hogs. Some pet animals are cleanly in their habits, but as there are many localities where cats and dogs roam at large and are caressed by every child that can lay hands on them there is good reason for taking special care against the homeless contingent of estrays.

TO THE HONORABLE JUDGES OF THE COURT OF QUARTER SESSIONS OF COLUMBIA COUNTY.

The Grand Jurors of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania inquiring for the body of the county of Columbia respectfully report that we have, pursuant to our required duties, calmly and deliberately investigated all the bills of indictment presented for our consideration, and have passed upon them according to their merits.

We have also examined the county buildings and find them in good condition with the following exceptions: The recorder's office is in a bad condition, the following repairs being necessary: re-papering, painting, window shutters and a new table. Also the water closet in rear of Court House is in a filthy condition. We would recommend that the zinc troughs therein be removed and porcelain bowls substituted, and an opening overhead for ventilation be made.

We would also recommend that the Court House and jail be connected by telephone thereby saving valuable time in the transacting of business between the two buildings. We are of the opinion that the Prothonotary's office is too small for the amount of business transacted there and would recommend an enlargement if not attended with too great an expense.

Corn in Hills or Drills.

A correspondent of the Country Gentleman writes: "As the result of twenty years of experience and observation, I am decidedly in favor of hill planting. Both methods are practised here to some extent, but planting in drills is not done so much now as four or five years ago. In this section the yield of measured bushels of ears per acre will be about the same by either method; but the ears that are grown by planting in hills are longer, the grain better developed, and consequently heavier, giving about ten per cent more shelled corn by weight than that grown by the other method. On the other hand, more stalks will be grown by planting in drills; but in our cornfields the grain is the main object, and we think it is better, if we are likely to need more fodder than we get with our crop, to devote a portion of land exclusively to the raising of fodder-corn.

"There is one other point to be considered—the labor question. Very little hand labor is required in corn after it is planted, if we have good horse implements, and good workmen to handle them, rowed both ways, while in the other case much hoeing is needed if the fields are kept clean. Good culture is necessary if you want a good crop of corn, and to have the land in good condition for barley the following year. In western-central Missouri, where I sojourned for three seasons, the verdict of the best farmers was to the effect that planting in rows both ways produced about ten per cent more corn, with two-thirds to three-fourths of the labor required in drill-planting."

USE YOUR BONES.—The Agriculturist says: "Bones accumulate on every farm, and a hunt for them will bring out many more than one would expect to find. When properly treated, they furnish very valuable food for growing plants. Whole bones, as they are thrown out from the kitchen, are so slowly decomposed, that they are of little use, unless applied very largely. They need to be broken up or made fine in some way that the large amount of phosphoric acid, etc., contained in them may be available. It is not practicable for ordinary farmers to have bone mills, and the next best thing is to break them up somewhat with an axe or heavy hammer, and mix them with unleached ashes, keeping the heap moist enough so the alkali will "eat" them, and render the bones soft. The bones thus treated will crumble to fine pieces when dried, and are then ready to be spread upon the land. Every farmer should see that all bones are thus made into a valuable home-made fertilizer."

A Few Problems.

What velocity must a locomotive have to pick up a deaf man walking on the track and fling him so high that six cars pass before he comes down?

A boy earned twenty cents per day for eighteen days, and bought his mother a mush-rat muff costing $2.10. How much did he have left to go to the circus with?

A farmer sold eleven bushels of potatoes and the product purchased two gallons of whiskey at ninety cents per gallon. How much per bushel did he get for his tubers, and where did he keep the jug?

A mother standing at the gate calls to her boy who is exactly sixty-eight feet distant. It takes two minutes and sixty-eight seconds for the sound to reach him. Find from this the velocity with which a woman's voice travels.

A woman earned forty-two cents per day by washing, and supported a husband who consumed four dollars' worth of provisions per week. How much was she in debt at the end of each month up to the time he was sent to the work house?

A father agreed to give his son four and one-half acres of land for every cord of wood he chopped. The son chopped three seventhsof a cord and broke the ax and went off hunting rabbits. How much land was he entitled to?—Detroit Free Press.

Owners of real estate along the New Jersey coast may perhaps be led to reflect, by the annual report of Prof. Cooke, the State Geologist, on the vanity of laying up to themselves riches where the surf and tide encroach, and where the sea breaks through and steals. From Sandy Hook all the way to Cape May, he says, the shore has been steadily worn away for a century. At Shrewsbury inlet the water line has moved inland from 165 to 330 feet since 1853; at one part of Long Branch, 375 feet; and opposite Whale Pond, 525 feet. It is known that about the year 1700 the line near a part of Cape May extended more than a thousand feet further out than now; while at Cape Island the shore has been worn off fully a mile during much less than a century. There is evidence not only of the attrition of the waves, but of the general rise in the high water level. Dead trees in great numbers are found standing in the tide marshes all along the coast; it is obvious that the great salt meadows between Newark and Jersey City were once arable uplands; islands have disappeared under the water—one, in Elsenborough, which contained ten acres of good farm land as late as 1865, being now utterly submerged; Money Island has also gone, and so has Round Island, which had forty acres of upland in 1803. New Jersey never was among the larger States, but it is evidently destined to become smaller, as well as to illustrate, by its fate how the contours of continents change in the ages.

Frederick Chopin.

It is related of Fredrick Chopin that his power with the pianoforte was such that he could hush the pupils of his father's school even in their most unruly moments. One day when Professor Chopin was out, there was a frightful scene. Barcinki, the master present, was at his wit's end, when Fredrick, we are told, happily entered the room. Without deliberation, he requested the boysterers to sit down, and called in those who were making a noise outside and promised to improvise an interesting story on the piano if they would be quiet. All were instantly as still as death, and Fredrick sat down to the instrument and extinguished the lights. He described the manner in which robbers approached a house, mounted by ladders to the windows, but were frightened away by a noise within. Without delay they fled into the wood, where they fell asleep under the starry sky. He played more and more softly, as if trying to lull children to rest, till he found that his hearers had actually fallen asleep. —From the Paris Register.
